Important information relating to the federal law on the promotion of home ownership using funds from tax-qualified provisions

Scope

The early withdrawal or pledge of pension plan savings can be used for the acquisition or construction of an owner-occupied property (apartment or single-family home), for acquiring a stake in a housing cooperative or tenants' joint-stock company or for the repayment of a mortgage loan.

Permissible forms of property include sole ownership, co-ownership (freehold apartment ownership in particular) and joint ownership among spouses as well as independent and permanent building rights.

The property must be used by the insured person himself or herself at his or her habitual place of domicile. Temporary third-party letting is possible if proof is provided that personal use of the property is temporarily not possible.

Payout of the early withdrawal

Under the promotion of home ownership scheme, the employee benefits foundation will only pay out benefits directly to the vendor, builder, lender or housing institution and only upon presentation of the requisite supporting documents and with the agreement of the insured person.

If there is a pension custody account in addition to the pension benefits account, entitlements of the Swiss Life Investment Foundation will be sold insofar as necessary for the early withdrawal following receipt of all necessary documents.

The early withdrawal sum will be paid out after receipt of the required documents and taking into account the desired payout date.

An early withdrawal may be asserted once every five years.

Tax consequences

The sum withdrawn in advance is liable - separately from other income - for federal, cantonal, municipal taxes at the time of withdrawal as a lump-sum payment from tax-qualified provisions (pillar 3a).

Processing fee

A fee is charged for processing an early withdrawal or pledge under the promotion of home ownership scheme, as stated in the current schedule of fees.

The provisions stated in the regulations as well as the legal stipulations shall apply.
